Personas: one missed SIPs, one faced low returns and a layoff; neither had guidance on what to do next

A — Akshata, 26 · Missed it, never meant to stop

"I did turn on the mandate auto debit because I kept forgetting to pay."

Demographics

26, salaried, salary on the 1st · first-ever mutual fund investment, first SIP in 2025 · one SIP of Rs 1,000 on the 1st

App usage

- Opens Groww only when the SIP payment is due
- Paid by hand at first; turned on autopay after missing
- Uses GR-1 to read the portfolio and trusts it fully
- Knows amount or date can change; has never used it

Key goals

- Long-term returns; expects more than 15% a year
- Keep the SIP going without having to remember it

Core friction points

- Forgot to pay: missed 2 to 3 instalments (not in a row)
- The one reminder gets lost among other notifications
- Did not know what several missed instalments lead to

P — Praveen, 34 · Laid off, nearly quit

"Pay less and postpone the SIP to next month." (what would have helped)

Demographics

34, salaried · first-ever mutual fund investment, first SIP about 4 months ago · SIP mid-month; salary date never a problem

App usage

- Opens Groww every morning to check the graph
- Has used skip (no confusion) and lowered the amount
- After the layoff, looked up how to stop the SIP
- Asks a friend or advisors; no AI, unaware of GR-1

Key goals

- Make money: expects at least 10% a year
- Wants the app to analyse and explain the portfolio

Core friction points

- Laid off and needed the money: the SIP nearly stopped
- Low returns and poor market knowledge made quitting tempting
- Did not know what several missed instalments lead to

Shared by all 4 interviewees: none knew what several missed instalments lead to; all 4 named a gentler path they would have taken
